We've Been Lied To

WRITTEN BY HUNTER

Before this school year, back in 8th grade, I was told many great things about New Tech. I was told that all we did was projects. I was told that we have a lot of freedom (being able to work anywhere, work whenever you want, etc.). I was told that teachers pay attention to your other classes so they don't overflow you with work. I was told that we would have Networking every single Wednesday and a Wonderful Wednesday every month. But, the sad thing is that I have been lied to. None of that is true.

Let's talk about the Networking first. Networking is something that New Tech was SUPPOSED to do every Wednesday. It's a day where our schedule is shortened and we take a good hour or so of our day to hang out with an assigned group and just chill with them. Sounds fun, right? Well, out of the whole year, we've had maybe about seven to eight Networkings. Remember, we're supposed to have one every Wednesday.

Then Wonderful Wednesday is a day where we're in Networking ALL day. No classes. Just Networking all day. And we're supposed to have one every month. We've had, I kid you not, about four. Maybe even three.

Next Lie: All we do is projects. Hey, I love projects. I love getting a group and working together to get done what is needed to be done. And yes, we have a lot of projects here. But it's not all we do. We actually have worksheets. A lot of them. And we do things a normal high school would do.

New Tech is actually just like any other high school. Just smaller and has a little more projects. Other than that, there is nothing different here. I was told that New Tech tries to stay away from worksheets. But, from what I've seen, they really don't. Worksheets are a norm here.

Next lie: They pay attention to your other classes. This one is probably the biggest lie. I'm being serious when I tell you that all these teachers do is overrun you with work. Global Issues feels like it's the superior class and just gives you as much work as they want, completely ignoring your other classes.

You have a hundred things to do every night JUST because your teachers are way too lazy to see how much work you're actually doing in other classes. Then, when you complain about it, they tell you to "suck it up and just do it". Wow, wonderful way of teaching, Whenever I was told these things, I never expected to actually be lied to.

New Tech.

The last and biggest lie: Freedom.

Where is this freedom they talk about? Where is this freedom that "defines New Tech"? I haven't seen it. None of my friends have seen it. Where the hell is it?

You're allowed to work anywhere you want? No, you're not even allowed to leave the classroom unless the teacher actually says so. Other than that, don't bother asking.

You're allowed to work whenever you want? No, you have very limited and specific deadlines. And when you tell a teacher you'll do it later so you can work on something else, they demand that you work on it anyways.

And that Mac? That qualifies as freedom? Don't make me laugh. You do one thing to this Mac, and it's instantly taken away from you and you're given a Dell for a few weeks so they can "fix the problem". Even when the problem is a fallen off key that you can legit fix yourself in five minutes.

I like New Tech, I really do. But it's no different than any other high school ever. A little more projects, no school bell, and a Mac. Wow. It's like every kid's dream.

I don't like being lied to just so you can get more students. I don't like getting my hopes up, expecting to go to some "awesome" school that "gives you more freedom than most". The learners of New Tech have been lied to. And I feel like I'm the only one that sees it.

Weekly Recommendation

Do I really need to explain to you why this show is awesome? Hell, I made a whole article about how much I love it. And it's so far my biggest one.

The acting is phenomenal. The writing is great and one of the best I've ever seen. The story and characters are so amazing that I actually find myself smiling every time I'm watching it.

I've never recommended a show so much to people. I have invested my life into this show. I mean, don't get me wrong. Being Human is and always will be my favorite show. But Game of Thrones is better, I am not denying that.

I can't explain it, just roll with it. I've never read the books, but I do plan on it. I love this show that much.

Watch this show. You'll love it. And if not love it, you'll respect it. You'll respect how much work is put into it and how budgeted it is.

HBO is known for great and amazing shows, and Game of Thrones does a fantastic job with proving that to everyone. Do I really need to say more?

I'm being serious. Watch this show. Like now. What are you waiting for? Go. Do it now. Now. Buy it.

Youtube, the most visited site in the world, and one black man rules them all.

He is KSIolajidebt. KSI is the name he uses in Halo, Olajide is his name, and BT is british telecom, hence KSIolajidebt.

He is the funniest person on youtube. With 5 million subscriber, he isn't the most watched, but he is the best.

His youtube introduction video is amazing "what it is like being black" and it is amazing. He plays FIFA like a boss and comments like a god.

His skits are the legend and his Q&A is just plain weird but SOOOO AMAZING!!!! To find out more about KSIolajidebt, you have to watch him.
